Property Description:	No buildings or structures existed on the lot as of October 2012 when Hurricane Sandy affected the area.
	The 0.459-acre lot is not located within an Archaeological Grid. It has not been identified as eligible for or listed in the NRHP nor is it located within a listed or eligible Historic District. However, the semi-rural lot is located in an area of no identified prior disturbances other than clearance and farming in the first half of the twentieth century. The northern portions of the lot may have contained early to mid-twentieth century farm structures associated with a farmstead and house located north of contemporary Reeves Street (historicaerials.com). The extent of disturbance resulting from the proposed new construction within the lot has not been determined at the time of this review. Water resources are located in proximity, and soils are moderately favorable at this location. Prior to any new construction within the lot, subsurface testing for the presence of archaeological resources is recommended.

URS has assessed the application property as having the potential to contain a NRHP-eligible historic property based on the following characteristics:
