

Everything Jersey

North Brunswick middle school tries personalized learning plans

By The Star-Ledger Continuous News Desk

March 01, 2010, 5:59AM

NORTH BRUNSWICK -- A middle school here is experimenting with personalized learning plans for its students, according to a report in The New York Times.

The report said 428 sixth graders at Linwood Middle School will be given electronic portfolios that establish an individualized academic path based on learning styles, interests, skills, career goals and extracurricular activities. The project is designed to last through each student's high school career.

© 2010 NJ.com. All rights reserved.