Web Response

As one who has lived in a suburban community for 46 years, and one who loves to hike and enjoy the outdoors, I believe that the Highlands Council must take the value of those experiences into account as much as a developer's right to a profit. The Council knows how difficult it is to set a value on the affect open spaces has on the emotional health of every individual, but I believe it is fair to say that our mental hospitals would be much fuller without them. This is a value that may be difficult to measure, but is none the less as tangible as the use of these open spaces for development.
