Why We Are

“For far too long, those with intellectual or developmental disabilities and their families have struggled to navigate the state and federal maze of services...Although there is more work to be done, the disability community now has a voice that will continue to fight for each and every one of these residents.”

Former Assemblywoman Valerie Vainieri Huttle
Legislative Sponsor
January 2023

“...It was clear to me that individuals with disabilities and their families required a central point of contact that would help them navigate and access the resources they needed not just to survive but to thrive.

Over the past five years, the Ombudsman’s office has fulfilled its role as a vital one-stop source of information and most important, has lent its expertise to advocating for individuals and their families in a timely and compassionate manner...”

Former NJ State Senator Congressman Tom Kean, Jr.
Legislative Sponsor
January 2023

“The work of our office is premised on and driven by the understanding that while many of us have special needs, all of us – each and every single one of us – has special gifts and that we all deserve the opportunity to be safe, to be healthy and to reach our full potential.”

What We Do

The legislation creating the Office outlines specific responsibilities, which can be grouped into 3 categories:

1. Advising / Supporting / Troubleshooting
 - Information & Referral
 - Options Counseling
 - Communications Coaching
 - Advocacy
 - Meeting Support
2. Recommending Improvements
3. Ensuring the Individual/Family's Voice is Heard

How We Do It

We work closely & directly with all of our partners.

- Individuals and Families
- Advocates
- Government Officials
- Providers

We participate in every possible meeting by phone, by video or in person.
When possible, we meet people where they live, work or socialize.

How We Do It

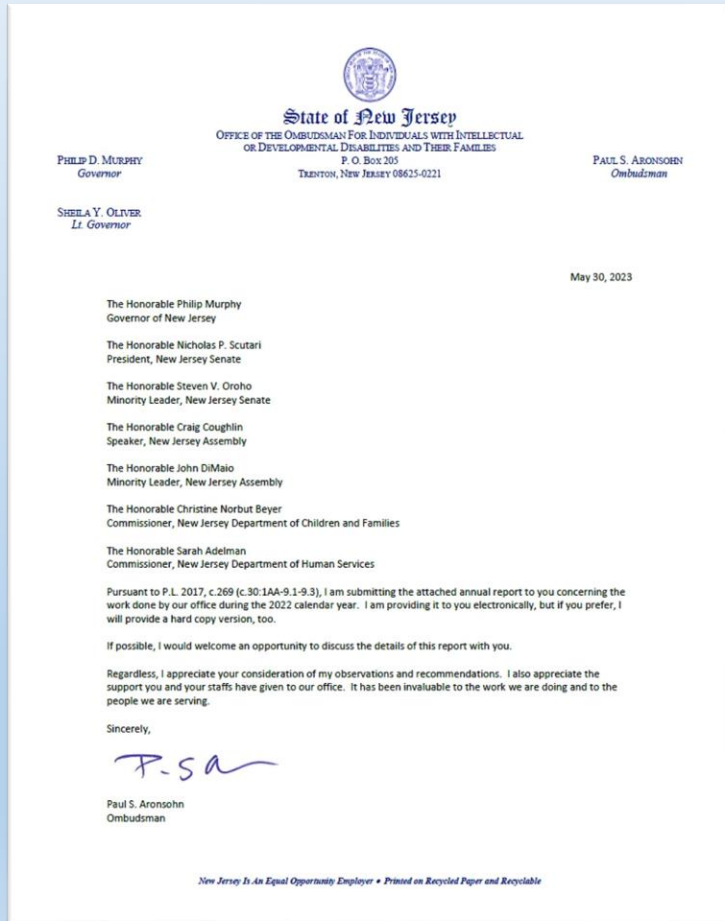

We Participate in Public Events...

How We Do It

We Issue an Annual Report...

3. a. The Ombudsman ... shall issue a written report annually ...

The report shall include a summary of the services the ombudsman provided during the year, and any specific recommendations the ombudsman deems appropriate and necessary concerning the State's implementation of procedures with respect to providing individuals with intellectual or developmental disabilities with services and supports.

NJ residents with disabilities 'in crisis,' report says

Gene Myers

The state's disability ombudsman released a report Tuesday that highlighted more losses than wins in the way New Jersey cares for people with disabilities.

The annual report by the ombudsman called the state programs for people with disabilities "a tale of two systems."

On one hand, dedicated people achieved a number of recent wins, such as securing additional education and therapy for disabled students thrown off course by the pandemic. They also managed to get a bill passed that did away with age and income limits placed on people with disabilities in the workforce that were tied to Medicaid benefits.

But while an increased interest in disability issues in the governor's office has led to advancements in some areas, like an additional $1 billion in funding going to community and care programs, a lot of work still needs to be done, said Ombudsman Paul Aronsohn.

The report is chock-full of examples of the toll an inflexible system plagued with ineffective policies can have on people's lives.

"For many people, the system remains too complex, too rigid, and too inaccessible. Daily, our office is contacted by people falling through the cracks.

Americans with disabilities must have their voices heard

Your Turn

Paul Aronsohn
Guest columnist

This week, at the United Nations, representatives from around the world are meeting to discuss the human rights of people with disabilities. The overarching theme of the meeting is "Build Back Better," and while the focus will be on the global response and recovery to the COVID-19 pandemic, there will be other discussions significant to people with disabilities, including those concerning independent living and educational rights. In all, representatives from about 180 countries are expected to participate.

Yet there will be an important voice missing from these proceedings — the voice of the more than 60 million Americans with disabilities and their families.

Simply stated, the United States is one of only nine countries that have not yet ratified the U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. As such, our country is not permitted to officially participate in this week's 14th session of the Conference of State Parties to the CRPD.

Clearly, this doesn't seem right. It doesn't seem right that we have not yet ratified this landmark treaty. Nor does it seem right to have such a meeting without the U.S., which is certainly one of the most inclusive, most accessible countries in the world. We should be sitting at that table.

Clearly, too, this needs to change. Americans with disabilities deserve to be represented in this high-level forum, and with a president and congressional leadership who have demonstrated their commitment to people with disabilities, now is the time to make that change.

The CRPD, which is observing its 15th anniversary later this year, is not only the first human rights treaty of the 21st century; it is also a compelling expression of the world community's determination to do right by people with disabilities and their families. It commits governments "to promote, protect and ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms by all persons with disabilities, and to promote respect for their inherent dignity." It also provides an invaluable forum for exchanging ideas, raising questions and building a more accessible future.

Without question, there is absolutely no good reason for us to be sitting on the sidelines. The United States remains the global leader on human rights, and as I know from my work over the years, disability is a nonpartisan issue.

Granted, as an advocate for people with disabilities, I am clearly biased on this subject. And as a family member, this is obviously personal. But even looking at this somewhat objectively — as an American — there is no reason not to make this the year when the U.S. takes its rightful place at the global disability table.

After all, the U.S. signed the CRPD in 2009, during the first year of the Obama administration. It now only makes sense for us to ratify it during the first year of the Biden administration and to do so with overwhelming bipartisan support. Doing so would be a wonderful, powerful way to underscore the president's message to the world that "the United States is back."

Paul Aronsohn, who comes from a family with disabilities, is New Jersey's Ombudsman for Individuals with Intellectual or Developmental Disabilities and Their Families. Previously, he worked for several years at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations.

Testimony of Paul Aronsohn,
Ombudsman for Individuals with Intellectual or Developmental Disabilities and Their Families
New Jersey Assembly Committee on Human Services
Thursday, October 22, 2020

Good afternoon, Chairwoman Downey and Members of the Committee.

Thank you for holding this very important hearing and for inviting so many individuals and families to be a part of this difficult, yet necessary conversation. I know that there is limited time today to provide in-person testimony, but it was good of you to encourage as much written testimony as possible.

Clearly, this is an issue-area that our state government takes very seriously, and over the years, steps have been taken to minimize, if not outright eliminate, abuse and neglect of individuals with disabilities in group homes and other congregate care facilities. The implementation of the Stephen Komminos Law, beginning in 2018, is just one of the most recent, most sweeping examples of the efforts that have been made in this regard.

Yet, we know that abuse and neglect still exist, and the testimonies presented today will speak to that ugly truth. We also know that there may be a very fine line between abuse and neglect. For some, neglect is arguably its own form of abuse.

My hope, therefore, is that today's hearing will be an important milestone in our collective efforts — across our two branches of government — to fix that which is broken and to make safer our system of care for people with disabilities. That might mean more oversight. That might mean more training. That might mean more use of monitoring technology. Or that might mean some combination of all of the above.

Regardless, at a minimum, it should mean more transparency with respect to investigations into abuse and neglect. Present practice is for allegations to be investigated, but not fully shared with the public even the individuals or families involved.

Persistent Challenges

Workforce Shortage

Many individuals with ID/DD lack vital direct care supports due to policies and practices that continue to result in unreasonably low wages/salaries, making it difficult to hire and retain qualified direct care staff –
Direct Support Professionals (DSP), Self-Directed Employees (SDE), Private Duty Nurses (PDN)

Abuse & Neglect

Many individuals in state-licensed residential settings are abused and neglected due to policies and practices that result in many of these settings being understaffed with underpaid & undertrained professionals, who must do challenging work with minimal oversight and supports.

Complex Medical Needs

Many individuals with complex medical needs live in institutional settings due to policies and practices that make it difficult/impossible for them to live in the community with access to the right assessments, treatments, supports, and services.

Autism/Severe Challenging Behavior

Many individuals with autism experience severe challenging behavior involving self-injurious, aggressive and/or destructive behavior due to policies and practices that make it difficult/impossible for families to gain access to the right assessments, treatments, supports, and services.

Recommendations

Need to Appoint More People with Disabilities and Family Members to Boards and Committees

Need to Hire More People with Disabilities and Family Members in Government Offices

“Nothing about us, without us.”

Need to Make Sure that People with Disabilities and Family Members Always Have a Seat at the Decision-Making Table
